A Lucky Dumpling

It was Spring Festival. Chen Yu and Grandpa made dumplings in the kitchen.

Grandpa put meat and cabbage in the middle. Chen Yu folded the dumplings. Her first dumpling was very fat! Grandpa laughed.

"Let's put a coin in one dumpling," said Grandpa. "The person who finds it will be lucky this year."

Chen Yu washed a coin and put it in a dumpling. Then they cooked all the dumplings in a big pot.

At dinner, everyone ate and ate. Mum did not find the coin. Dad did not find the coin. Chen Yu ate ten dumplings, but she did not find it.

Then Grandpa bit his last dumpling. "Ouch!" he said. He smiled and held up the coin.

"You are lucky, Grandpa!" said Chen Yu.

Kites: Up in the Sky

People have flown kites for more than two thousand years. Many people think that the very first kites were made in China, from wood. Later, kites were made from silk and thin pieces of bamboo. When paper was invented, paper kites became popular, because paper is light and cheap.

How does a kite fly?

A kite needs wind. When the wind blows against the kite, it pushes the kite up into the air. The string is important too. The person holding the string keeps the kite facing into the wind. Without a string, the kite would simply blow away. A long tail helps the kite to stay steady, so that it does not spin round and round.

Kites for work and kites for fun

Long ago, kites were not only toys. Some kites were used to send messages. Others were used to test the wind. Today, most people fly kites for fun. Some kites are tiny and fit in your hand. Others are enormous, as long as a bus, and several people must hold them.

A city of kites

Weifang, a city in Shandong, is famous for its kites. Every April, people from all over the world travel there for a kite festival. The sky fills with dragons, butterflies, fish and birds. Some dragon kites are made of more than one hundred pieces joined together.

If you want to fly a kite, choose an open space, away from trees and electric wires. A light, steady wind is best.
